

I don't think it can be stressed enough as to how XM users feel about their radio. Since we are paying to listen to the content I think it is up to us as to what we should be able to listen to. Just recently, XM upped their content and removed virtually all commercials from their systems because it was WHAT USERS WANTED! Finding this level of commitment from a large corporation to their consumers is very rare these days and an important aspect to keep the consumers happy. Instead of placing restrictions on satellite radio companies, have the competitors, local stations which are now mainly owned by even larger corporations, find ways to improve services. My main reason at first for purchasing XM was not because of the superior audio quality but because of the lack of commercials!
